

From Old Kentucky.

Editor American Sheep Breeder:—

My Angora goats have done fine this winter, and kidding has just commenced. I am making every effort possible to save the kids, as I have bred my does to Hoerle's imported A. B. Hobson buck. I bred them at the rate of 6 to 10 a day. This will give us a chance to see that the mothers own their kids, as I have experienced in the past the yearling does will not own their kids very well at first, and I haven't been very successful in raising them (not over 25 per cent.) but I haven't lost patience or faith, but what I can raise them here, and I intend to build up a flock of Angora goats that will be a credit to our State, as this part of the State (or rather Eastern Kentucky) is an ideal country for goat and sheep farms. It is mountainous, with rich creek valleys. The hills have been very productive while fresh, but the majority of farmers have raised corn several years in succession until it will not produce over 20 bushels an acre, average, while fresh land will produce 30 to 50 bushels, and if put down in grass after it has had one or two crops of corn or tobacco it will produce a good sod or blue grass or any other grass, even to red top. But I find it is expensive to keep the sprouts from growing or smothering the grass out, unless it is cut once a year.

So here is where the goats come in. While the mohair will more than pay for the extra feed they require in winter, which will not be much after you have grass sod to feed them on and only have to feed when there is a deep snow on the ground. It has been an experiment for the last five years. I owned a large tract of timber land, and after I had sawed the timber and taken everything off, such as ticks, ticks, and cross ties, the land was not worth over $5 per acre. That is what such land sold for here. So I had some tobacco barns built and leased my land to tobacco growers. They would clear the land for two crops and then put in ryegrass.

I got a good stand of grass, but the sprouts were so hard to keep down that it cost all I could get from pasturing the grass and have this done once a year, but now I have the goats and follow with sheep. I am getting one of the best hill farms in this section, while my neighbors have worn out the hill and grown up with sprouts. I just mention my experience so others may profit by it. My land is now worth $15 per acre. I have now a flock of native ewes and so far have 100 lambs dropped in February, from 150 ewes, and 50 more ewes to lamb. I have castrated and docked all my lambs, and with full stock Shropshire rams I hope to build up a good flock of sheep. I intend to run all my ewes and lambs in one flock and change to new fields once a week. I have eight fields containing about 200 acres each, but one-third of the fields are in woods. I will put my goats on the fields after the sheep. This will make the goats clean out the sprouts and give the sheep and lambs the best grass.

Last year I divided my flock and put some on each field, and had some loss from stomach worms.

I will keep Summer's Worm Powder in the salt before them all the time.

As I am also engaged in other business I would like to have a practical sheep raiser with $2,000 to take a share in my sheep and goat business. I have a good show for the right sort of a man who is willing to live in an old settled country, but rather backward in up-to-date farming and living. It is through your valuable paper that I have been induced to go into the sheep and goat business, and I am not sorry of it, as it is what every land owner in this section should have on his sprout hill farm, and first of all your valuable paper.

That she will have to compete only with the candidates in her district, but may get votes anywhere.

That the lady receiving the highest vote in her district will go as the representative of that district.

That every dollar paid to THE NEWS for subscription, job printing and new advertising obtained through the efforts of the candidates themselves is good for 100 votes.
